Jessica G. understands the advantages that positive social skills can bring to young people. That's why she spent over a year looking for an effective etiquette program for her eight-year-old daughter, Carly. When she learned about It's All About Kids' Etiquette and Manners classes at a local Macy's store, she quickly enrolled Carly in the program.

As a busy mother of three, Jessica knew how difficult it can be for parents to find time to give their children the in-depth social-skills training they need. Finding a nonprofit to help with this task was a dream come true.

"There's so much to learn when it comes to table manners and being a thoughtful guest in someone's home. I wanted Carly to feel comfortable and confident in all social situations," Jessica explains.

The results of Carly's participation in Etiquette and Manners have been impressive. She helps set the table at mealtime and puts a napkin on her lap when she eats. She understands why someone would wear a suit or dress to a special occasion. And because good hygiene is one of the topics the program addresses, Carly is now much more diligent about brushing her teeth.

"Every child can benefit from etiquette training – it's a foundation for life-long confidence," says Jessica. "I have two younger children—when they're old enough, they'll be enrolled in this program."
